Command Philosophy

Mission. Ready. Navy. Family.

Mission. We develop Information Dominance Sailors with the skills necessary to help our Navy fight and win. This fact is what motivates us to act, and represents the core of our leadership actions, management practices and decision-making processes.

Ready. Maximum readiness in terms of our crew manning, training programs, and system functionality enables us to accomplish our mission. We develop ourselves and one another personally and professionally via a visible commitment to fitness, continual learning, and resilience through life balance. We set the conditions that allow us to maximize our potential. We view the improvement and sustainment of our readiness as vital actions within our command.

Navy. We belong to a profession of arms, and we hold the sacred trust of the American people. We hold ourselves and one another accountable to a higher standard of conduct. Through our personal example of the Core Values, we honor our Navy's rich heritage. We develop and maintain a warrior's mindset, and conduct ourselves professionally in word and deed at all times.

Family. We are part of a family comprised of military and civilian members, and we treat one another with respect and dignity. We recognize the contributions of our loved ones and the support of our Shipmates as the lifeblood of our readiness. We spend time communicating with each other openly. We help one another in our daily tasks, and we support each other in times of need.

Together, we will ensure that we are a mission-ready Navy Family.
